Chapter 1 by MARK WYNN-BLACKLEDGE

Once a family bought a house with a fireplace that was boarded up. This fireplace was boarded up for no reason but the fact that it was haunted. When the family moved in they had children, and their kids names were Alex, who was a girl and a baby, Obama. These kids weren't just normal any normal kids, because they can sense the supernatural.

One day their mom was reading them a book when she heard something whispering in her ear. The children looked up and were frozen in horror at what they saw. What they saw was horrifically ugly, because they saw a ghost of a old lady whose eyes were sunken into black holes. She also had a horrible looking mouth that was rotting away at the touch. As well as having a scary face the ghost was also wearing a white gown that looked like it got shredded by something. As the children stared at the old women, their mother continued to wonder what they were looking at and what was whispering in her ear over and over again.

The next couple of days went by in a flash the kids had forgotten what they had seen, but the mother was still very curious about what had happened earlier that week. So she went and asked if they had seen anything, and they had said that they had seen an old lady in a white shredded gown with a horrifically scary face standing over them. At first she didn't believe them, but then she thought about it and realized that it was probably true.
